Fire postpones Sig Ep party

The annual Sigma Phi Epsilon Halloween Party was postponed Saturday night due to a small fire in the furnace room in their basement. The fire started when a high voltage electrical panel short-circuited, throwing sparks over the small room and catching some paper and wood on fire. The fire was quickly put out by members of Sig Ep, but smoke still filled the house.

Luckily, no one was injured and not much damage was done. With the power off in the basement and everything somewhat disturbed, the party was postponed to a later date. So save your costumes or start thinking of a new costume, and be ready to party at the next Sig Ep "Halloween Smoker".

Islamic government

In turn, pro-Khomeini students have stepped up their attacks on government opponents. Perhaps the most violent confrontation was the Metro State affair in which the pro-Khomeini demonstrators stormed the anti-Khomeini Iranian Cultural Club's screening of a film about Kurdistan — the rebellious Iranian province at war with Teheran.

"There were a lot of children in the room," says

Kamal, a member of the Iranian Cultural Club.

"(The pro-Khomeini students) want everyone to follow the government's policy," says a member of the Metro State Moslem Student Society, which also opposes the Khomeini regime.

The member insists on anonymity, out of a fear shared by anti-government Iranian students that pro-Khomeini students are spies in the pay of the ayatollah's regime. I've heard personally that they've reported names of students not on their side," he says. "As a result, many students can't receive money from home, and their families are also in danger."

"One of my best friends here in Denver returned to Iran about six months ago," Kamal says, "and she was executed."

"It's a real catch-22," says Biddinger. "They can't get money from home, yet they can't hold jobs here because their status as foreign students legally prevents it. Thus many of them feel they have no economic choice except to return to Iran. Yet they're afraid they'll be killed if they go back."

Biddinger says an increasing number of students have applied for political asylum here. Yet she reports "practically all the applications — some 300 to 400 — have been rejected by State Department officials for no apparent reason."

Biddinger believes the chaotic situation in Iran has affected the academic performances of Iranians in America. "They've always had an extraordinarily good record here academically, yet all the trauma of recent times has certainly, inevitably affected their studies. Some just can't function at all anymore."

United States throughout its history.

Superdance events planned

Submitted by APO

Attention all Campus organizations! Don't forget that APO will be awarding a trophy to the group that gives the most support to Superdance '81.

Points will be awarded for five categories: 1 — the number of members dancing or watching the 30-hour danceathon, 2 — amount of money donated to MDA through the kissing booth, 3 — favorite couple penny-voting, 4 — slave auction, and 5 — number of posters and banners made for the dance.

The penny voting will be tallied to determine the crowd's favorite couple at the end of the dance when the trophy for that will be awarded. This means a dollar will buy one hundred votes for your favorite dancers.

The slave auction, featuring the Fall '81 APO pledges, will begin Saturday evening at 8 PM. This is a perfect way to donate to MDA and get someone to do all that dirty laundry or wash and wax the car, or bake cookies, or, clean your room!

Between the hours of 8 PM and 12 PM on Friday and 8:30 and 12 PM on Saturday, you can come out to Lion's Den and actually kiss the APO Superdance kissing experts. Friday night's lineup will feature Todd Thomas, Steve Emmendorfer, Steven Parks, Don Anselm, Dave May, Kevin Isom, Mike Moline, and Mike Avery. And, Janet Walsh, Laura Pagano, Kammie Akers, Julie Compton, Julie Robertson, and Teresa Doerr. And more, many more, on Saturday night.

Don't miss out on the action, help your organization win the participation trophy, and come on out to Lion's Den, right next to Lion's Park. It's all happening this weekend ... SUPERDANCE '81!!

Space Shuttle

By BOB KOENIG

If all goes well the space shuttle Columbia will make another voyage into space Friday morning. Tuesday evening's national news (Walter's old network) spoke at some length about the future of the space program. "NASA, under heavy budget pressures has cut back major scientific and experimental ventures."

Personally, I am greatly saddened by the cutbacks in NASA's financing. The development of the space shuttle has been a long and costly affair. Unfortunately, now that the greatest costs are over the budget-tightening Reagan administration is cutting back on the scientific end. Of course, much scientific research will still take place, but many of the early flights will be dedicated to military missions. I thank God for the military missions; without them the space shuttle would probably be sitting in a warehouse somewhere instead of upon a launch pad

Commandment misinterpreted

In last week's article entitled "Definitely It's Defense," Don Reader gave reasons why he feels that defense spending by this country is justifiable. I feel that one of his arguments must receive an immediate response. I'm referring to his statement that the "Thou Shalt Not Kill" Commandment "... must be placed in historical and lingual perspective." Mr. Reader claims that this Commandment was never applicable to "the killing of societal enemies." Historical and lingual perspective notwithstanding, anybody can see that it is not the way God intended His Commandment to be interpreted.

Student inactivity fees

By KEVIN FARRELL

The Student Council is holding a referendum on increasing student activity fees. The referendum is being held due to the increased enrollment and other factors. An average inflation increase is considered to be 7% by STUCO.

I think it sounds a little ridiculous to raise the fees because enrollment is increasing. I'm fairly good at math and I have a theory. I propose that if more people pay the same fee that was paid last year by fewer people, then more money will have been paid.

I suppose the grounds for raising the fees with increased enrollment would be that more people will be using the facilities that this money helps to support. First we should evaluate the actual percentage of people who actually benefit from these facilities. Every one of us is reluctant to give money to something that we know we won't use.

As usual, the University Center is at the top of the list. Now why does Auxiliary Enterprises need a boost? It's not exactly a non-profit organization. In addition, how many people actually take advantage of the U-Center? I mean, I feel bad about laying out money for the U-Center because I never (never, ever) go there. I say that those who make their semi-permanent address the U-Center should pay some rent.

I think that the increase proposed for the U-Center should go towards student social and recreational expenses. After all, it is a student activity fee, not a small business loan.

The golf course needs an 11 percent increase. I don't play golf. I don't want to pay for other people to play golf. I think it's fine to get out there and shoot 9 holes but not out of my wallet. Just increase the greens fees. People who golf should get used to the idea that it's a game for people with money.

I realize that some activities will require more money due to increased expenses. However, I'm tired of paying for other people's activities. If all increases are approved the student activities fees will be $88.60 for the first semester pointing towards the stars.

The thought that our nation has come to the point where a significant and important scientific step can be justified only by its military value or that the Russians are ahead of us (US) turns my stomach but that's the breaks.

Money, there's the bottom line, everything's got to have a return (except the military missions, of course). NASA scrambles to theorize possible returns in material fabrication and chemical production. Other experts question NASA's figures and the debate continues.

Poor NASA, their task is harder than Christopher Columbus trying to sell his voyage to India via the western route. At least Chris could fall back on his good looks and a friendly queen (democracy definately has some disadvantages).

Exhibit succeeds

Dear Editor:

This past Saturday, KUMR radio joined in the Parents' Day activities by sponsoring its fifth annual Gallery Art Exhibit on the mezzanine floor of the UMR Library. We had to clear away chairs, tables, couches, and students in order to make room for the many displays. We want to apologize to those students who had to find other places to study in an already overcrowded library. We also want to thank those students for their courteous response to our request that they leave. The exhibit was a success on all accounts and we had many favorable reactions from visiting parents. None of this would have been possible, however, without the cooperation of the UMR student body.

Thanks again!

Blue Key Extends Invitation

Blue Key is a national honor fraternity here at UMR. Membership in Blue Key is limited to those men and women who have taken active interest in campus welfare. The members do not, however, rest on their laurels. The contrary is true as members often strive for further accomplishments, thus making Blue Key one of the most active organizations on campus.

Several activities are undertaken by Blue Key every year. Perhaps the most noticeable of these is the Blue Key Student Directory. This directory is made possible through the efforts of members of Blue Key, who solicit the advertising of Rolla merchants for financial backing. With aims at producing future leaders, Blue Key also sponsors a leadership seminar for underclassmen. This seminar is conducted by the members and acquaints the participants with methods of leadership and the requirements of various campus organizations. Blue Key also provides a resume service for all UMR graduates. Letters are sent to over 600 companies inviting them to purchase resume packets prepared by Blue Key. Students who have shown outstanding participation in campus organizations are honored by the "Blue Key Miner of the Month" award. An article and picture of the chosen individual are published in the school newspaper, "The Missouri Miner", thus notifying the campus of the individuals accomplishments.

If this sounds interesting and worthwhile, we extend an invitation to you to apply for membership next semester. Membership is limited to students who have completed at least 60 hours of college work, have maintained a grade point average of 2.75 or better, and have a minimum of 40 Blue Key points. Applications will be available at the candy counter in the University Center.

St. Pat's Facts

Members of the University of Missouri-Rolla St. Pat's Board donated a recent Saturday morning to help make improvements in Lions Club Park.

According to Gene Brown, chairman of the park, the 38 St. Pat's Board members "deserve a pat on the back for an excellent job of work — pruning branches, trimming trees and cutting wood, painting buildings, furniture and a bridge, and clearing brush."

Mike Avery, St. Pat's Board president, said that this is one of the St. Pat's Board's service projects to help UMR-Community relations by bettering the park.

Cult movies attract fans

What does the science fiction box office hit "2001" have in common with a 1936 quasi-documentary, called "Reefer Madness," about the hazards of marijuana? What do both films have in common with "The Wizard of Oz" or "The Red Shoes," with the porno favorite "Behind the Green Door" or the champ of the midnight circuit, "The Rocky Horror Picture Show"?

These films have all attained cult status. For each there exists a group of passionate fans who don't simply enjoy their favorite films — they worship them. They flock to the estimated one thousand "midnight movie" theatres and to the countless film societies and art theatres across the country, where these films are shown regularly, again and again and again.

Danny Peary examines 100 of these exceedingly popular films in his book CULT MOVIES. The Classics, The Sleepers, The Weird and The Wonderful. Delta Books will publish this compendium of films which have become true classics in cinema in a trade paperback edition in November 1981.

In a lively text, Danny Peary discusses movies from the silent era to the present that have transcended the traditional Hollywood movie formula and "have been taken to heart by segments of the movie audience, cherished, protected, and, most of all, enthusiastically championed." These 100 films have become the cult movies of American cinema.

Complemented by 450 photographs, CULT MOVIES presents the credits and a plot synopsis of each film included. Danny Peary also provides a subjective essay for each which tells what it is about each film that makes it different from the traditional Hollywood film and therefore fascinating to its fans: the theme, odd characters, off-beat dialogue, performance by cult stars, novel handling of a popular genre, outstanding special effects, superior camerawork, direction or other elements. In so doing, CULT MOVIES also uncovers many wonderful bits of trivia:

* Ronald Reagan was originally cast as Rick Blaine in the role made famous by Humphrey Bogart in "Casablanca."

* "The Wizard of Oz" has been seen more times by more people than any other film.

* Corey Allen unknowingly anticipated the death of James Dean when he portrayed a man about to be killed in a crash in the famous car racing scene in "Rebel Without a Cause" just months before Dean's tragic death.

Danny Peary is the author of Close-ups: The Movie Star Book, The Photo History of Television, and The American Animated Cartoon. He has written film criticism for many newspapers and magazines, film treatments and scripts, and has run a film society. He lives in New York.

Living with

Studying, scarfing & snoring

By K. K.

This is an article for all you students out there who have roommates. Not frats, that's more like a big clubhouse, but those who have from one to five or six people, living, eating, sleeping, and studying in the same place.

Now that more than half the year is over, you've finally learned all the little quirks and habits of those fun, fun roommates. I'm not talking about the big things, like being an overall slob or a neatness fanatic. Those habits are not changeable and you really can't live with the person if you don't have the same habit. The "odd couple" scene really doesn't work. I'm writing about the little things. The real little things, such as cracking your knuckles or tapping your foot.

There are three big categories that annoying habits fall into: sleeping, eating, and studying. Most other times you can exit the room or leave the house to escape.

In the category of sleeping are some biggies. There's the proverbial snorer. Just when you're dropping off to sleep and your dream come true is flashing before your eyes and about to tell you how much he or she loves you this vision utters a ... snore. Everything shatters, again, and you roll over and try to get your roommate to roll over. Other than snoring there's the teethgrinder, the lip-smacker, the talker, and the sleep-walker. Worst is to have the talker and sleep-walker together. At 3:00 a.m. your roommate jumps out of bed, runs to the door and yells, "Fire!" Immediately you jump up and run out the door. After a minute of standing your skivies, barefoot, in the cold, you realize there is no fire. Going back in the house, you realize your roommate is back in bed sleeping in blissful ignorance.

Some people have weird sleeping hours. There is always some nerd who thinks night and day ought to be switched. They study until 4:00 a.m. and then sleep all day, or whenever they don't have classes. If you can sleep with the light on and study with the shades pulled you're o.k. If not, time to find a new roommate.

Study habits aren't too bad. Everyone (or most let's say) study, and when you study you try to tune out most everything, maybe excluding the stereo. Some little habits though do get through at least to me. Talking to oneself is a big one. Sitting doing calculus problems and having someone talking about statics across the table or at the next desk can screw you up. You're thinking 8-15+65/65 and your roommate's saying 16-15+85, and you write 8-15+85/65. It could take ages to finish one problem. Playing punk rock is almost as bad as talking. You get into a rut of thinking the same three-word chorus over and over again. Some people do annoying little things with their hands and feet while studying. Foot-tapping, twisting a lock of hair, nail-biting (that little "chomp" always bothers me), and knuckle-cracking are a few.

Eating is a big category. It includes not only what you eat but how you eat it. Everybody raise your hands who lives with someone who mainly eats four things. How about PB and J sandwiches, hot dogs, milk, and potato chips or for the health food freaks: apples, nuts, lettuce and carrots. Seeing the same thing in the icebox week after week gets depressing. Of course, all their stuff is left at the end of the week so you end up eating the same old thing they do.

A lot of little things can bother somebody about how a person eats. Eating loudly, or smacking, always bothered my father. He'd banish you from the table if you ate too loud. Nothing could interrupt his evening news. Taking little bitty bird bites and then chewing it to death is a big one for me. A friend of mine in high school (her name was Lenny) took half an hour to eat half a sandwich. I'd find myself counting how many bites of that poor sandwich she took. My friends always kidded me about the way I eat sandwiches, from the outside in. As I see it you have the best part, the middle, last. Only one of my roommates has said anything and that was, "You're weird," but I knew that already. Some people pick apart all their food and some push everything into a big pile. I never could understand how mashed potatoes, peas, carrots, corn, gravy and roast beef could be eaten in one bite. Don't all the tastes get mixed up together and clash? Then again you can eat up one thing before going on to another. I'm sure you can find some little habit that bothers you a bit. But, after all they're only little habits and you can learn to live with them. You've got your own, you know.

Help Wanted

Dear Help Wanted,

I think I'm going crazy! My boyfriend does some of the strangest things lately and I can't figure out why. We seemed to be really great together, but now he's acting so weird.

For instance, he'll play all these dumb games, or makes fun of me. He tries to upset me, then he says it's all a joke. Last weekend he came over and said he was going home to Springfield, for no reason at all. We had planned a date that night, and here he said he was leaving. Then after I practically drag it out of him he tells me it's all a joke. He's been doing this for about a month now. What should I do?

and $81.10 for the second semester.

it the wrong way.

His 'tests' of love are getting to you, as I can see, so it's time you tried to get it all out in the open. Explain to him that you don't like his behavior, and maybe some other type of activity should be started. Some sport or game that you could take up, or meet some new friends, something to try to let him know that all his games are unnecessary.

If he continues his games, he may want out of the relationship. Next time, call his bluff. He'll be surprised, but you'll know where you stand when he reacts.

Dear Help Wanted,

I've heard of classes that are made to weed people out of Rolla, but a teacher that purposely tries to flunk a student; this is outrageous!

There's a math class I have that there is no way possible for me to pass. The tests are impossible, the teacher unreasonable, and the class worthless. I go to class and try to get as much out of it as I can, go home and do the problems, and try to study. But this teacher is so far out. He's a transfer from another school and teaches us methods from "most calculus books" and they are nothing like the ones we use.

I've tried to get help from other students, but my teacher uses different teaching methods. I've even gone to his office to have him explain the material, but he gets up on the chalkboard and says the same nonsense he says in class. When the tests roll around, I'm a goner. What should I do?
— Concerned Student

Dear Concerned,

It's amazing how teachers make such a big difference on this campus. You could get a good one, learn the material well, and everything is fine. But there are always a few losers, and you seem to hit on the best of the bunch.

If you would have recognized the trouble at the beginning of the semester, you could have switched sections, but it's a little late now. You have to deal with the problem.

The only alternative you have is to teach yourself. If your teacher doesn't get his point across, then learn it on your own. He can't mark your method wrong on the test if the answer is right; if he does, complain to the head of the math department.

Sure, it's a lot of work; there are the guys who never have to study and Ace the class — but you got a real winner teacher, too: Yourself!

Dear Help Wanted,

I came from a large family that didn't have a lot of money, so we weren't smothered with lavish gifts and expensive items.

and self-destruction.

This evening, Muffy had shown up in a rather inexplicable costume that consisted of a skirt and tank top, a lot of painted tinfoil jewelry, a tinfoil protrusion from her forehead and a fake beard. Joe and a group of brothers stood off to one side in a group guessing at what she was supposed to be.

"Now what do you suppose she's supposed to be?" asked B.J.

"Now that's a toughie," said Bill. "doesn't look like the Goodyear blimp. The clothes that is."

This brought a chuckle

My roommate on the other hand, has the best of everything. Jill's family is very well off and could afford to buy her the best.

Jill is a really great roommate but I feel uncomfortable going places with her. My clothes aren't nearly as nice as hers and I can't fix myself up the way she can.

I know that money isn't everything, but when you don't have any, it's a lot!

—Out-classed

Dear Out-classed,

For starters, you are not out-classed. People that look at externals aren't worth knowing. Never lose your personality and become a pair of designer jeans and izod shirt.

But there are times when you want to look nice and may need some help to feel good about yourself. Ask Jill to help. If she's as great a roommate as you said she is, then she'd be happy to show you a few pointers. She may even offer some of her clothes for you to borrow. Don't think she's outdoing you when she helps, remember, you asked.

Living with cats

By M. DEAN ANGOVE

When it was finally decided that this article should be about cats, it became difficult to put a finger on just exactly what aspect of Catdom to write about.

A few of the primary thoughts were: "All About Cats," and "Fun Things You Can Do With a Cat"; but, those really didn't seem to capture deep thought and conviction of all people who just may have some form of cat appreciation (or depreciation). So this would never reach a conclusion unless a topic was pinpointed.

Finally, that perfect theme was uncovered: "How to Live With a Cat."

You see, whether you be a cat-lover or -hater, these furry little balls of joy can be the source of unending hours of happiness and clean-up work. (It should be noted that if the reader doesn't really like cats, they should interject their own adjectives, nouns, etc., to create the proper mood.) Kitty-cats are the most popular form of terrestrial feline life. A cat is a kitty-cat until it reaches the age of about two. Since in relation to human years that equals fourteen years old, the cat will then be a teenager. Unfortunately, cats rarely reach adulthood until they have lived at least seven of their nine lives, and therefore it is applicable to spend a little time speaking about the cat life up to adulthood...

... Once cats have stopped being cute and cuddly as a kitten, they become destructive and cocky. The average cat during the first few months of life will undoubtedly leave a respectable number of little undesirables, that we shall term 'presents,' for lack of a more appropriate term. These little presents will usually be best located where you look the least: in the corner of a closet, under the sofa, or perhaps even in the shower, depending on the cleanliness of the owner. But these shouldn't discourage the potential cat owner, they are in the minority of the many various little "happenings" that your new kitty will give so generously to you ... without so much as a blink of an eye.

As cats grow older, they often tangle with any number of wild creatures that you didn't suspect even lived near you. Sometimes, as in the case of a skunk, your poor cat must be given a bath ...

... Now, who doesn't know about the respect that cats give water. No, not the tiny little puddles after a rain, or the tap in the bowl, but the larger bodies of water, such as a bathtub full.

To you a bath full of water is really inconsequential, but to a cat, a bath full of water is like Schuman Park pond ... better if it's a long way off. So, here are a few hints on bathing the cat.

First, one should recall that the domestic cat is of the genus Felis, which also includes the lion, tiger, leopard, cougar, and puma. The cat rarely displays to any degree the characteristics of the larger relatives, but if it gets within twenty feet of "deep" water

(three-quarters of a foot and deeper) it will undoubtedly be quite anxious to remind you of that relationship. So it is best to have a friend nearby who is ready to assist you in this task. It is best to draw a very hot bath initially, because unless you do, the water will be room temperature by the time the cat is finally forced in the tub. Once it is in the tub, it

Match of the century

"What?" replied the group almost in unison.
"Nah, I guess she wouldn't know about that, would she," Mongo said.

After a little more speculation the group began to give up. Finally Joe said, "I guess we'll have to ask her. God may work in mysterious ways but Muffy's mind has got to take the cake."

Joe walked over to where Muffy was standing, power-babbling with a group of little sisters. The rest of the brothers followed not wanting to miss the match of the century.

"Hi, Muffy."

"What do you want?" Muffy asked suspiciously, knowing Joe pretty well.

"What are you supposed to be? A cover girl for Safari Monthly?"

"Wrong, bile breath! One more comment like that I'm going to hit you!" Muffy said in a way that resembled Miss Piggy.

"Sorry. We were just wondering."

"I'm Cleopatra!"

The group stifled a laugh except for Joe, who kept a straight face, mainly because he was within an arm's length.

"Oh! I see," said Joe. "What's that on your forehead?"

"That's a snake head-dress, you mental midget," she said.

"Oh, that's a pretty complicated costume. Bet it took a lot of time to make. I know how you could have saved yourself a lot of trouble though."

"It did take a lot of time," she said.

Someone in the background muttered, "And tinfoil."

Muffy hesitated a moment before she asked, "How could I have saved some trouble?"

"Painted yourself black and came as a bowling ball."

WHAM! Muffy hit Joe with a backhand that bounced Joe off the wall as the group broke into raucous laughter. Joe shook his head and looked over at Muffy and the group of sympathetic little sisters coming at him.

"Stampede!" he screamed as he got up and ran for safety.

Later on, he snuck back down to the bar with Laura, keeping an eye out for Muffy, and sat at the bar.

Bill Miner had walked into the party and the foursome was laughing so hard at his costume Joe failed to see Muffy coming at him. She reached across the bar, grabbed Joe by his shirt and lifted him off his stool.

"Okay, runt you've had it," Muffy said to a startled Joe Miner.

"W-Wait," Joe stammered, his mind frantically searching for a way out of his predicament, though he probably wouldn't have felt it. Then his mind put one and one together.

"I'm sorry, but I can make it up to you."

"How?" Muffy demanded, besides she wanted to see him grovel.

"You see that guy over there?" Joe pointed out an unsuspecting Bill Miner, innocently scanning the crowd unaware of the card fate was about to deal him. "I've got him in a class and he wants to meet you. I think he likes you."

Muffy dropped Joe back onto his bar stool from which he fell to the ground.

"Really," she said in a flowery voice and rushed off to meet him.

Music, a transcendental beginning

Music is the Unique Art form. Life is a form of give and take. Forget your future destination for a moment. The whole world is one big fantasy as we too are one with the sun. Silently I want to be the symphony of stars singing through my soul. Yet, from an inner depth of reality we always seem to transcend back to the essence of our beginnings. As the body melts into the universe, we also melt into the soundless voice. From this soundless voice we merge our souls into the all-shining light. For some this light brings infinite joy, for others it seems to be idly waiting to grow. Who knows what we can expect?

It always seems that we have to go faster than this to reach the top. That dirty Old Mountain! All covered in smoke, she can turn you to stone. You get halfway up only to realize you are halfway down. Keep going, you can do it. What can we expect once there? Do not look back, yet above all, never forget your past. The future is too far away you say, no, the future is here at our fingertips.

Take it, venture onward into the smoke overhead. As the top looms closer, the smoke begins to take shape.

Once there, we realize these shapes are simply innocent clouds shrouding the upper sea of the world. Below the sun, from one horizon to the next, lies our vast sea of shimmering clouds. Mountaintops gracefully emerge from the ever-changing sea of hope. Look ... an opening to below. Through a break in the clouds we can see the valleys and paths we traversed to get here.

Music was created for these journeys. Music is the transcendental beginning we all search for.

My point is that Columbus didn't know the new world was out there anymore than Alexander Fleming knew that the mold killing his germ cultures would turn out to be penicillin. The connection? Both men were exploring, both men were in the "laboratory" with their hands on, when something unexpected "popped" up. Doing research in space without being in it is like doing oceanographic studies from the middle of the Sahara Desert: costly, difficult and ineffective.

So here we sit with one of the most expensive and effective tools for scientific research ever developed on the launching pad and people in the government and the street screaming don't use it. Four-point-some-odd billion dollars to defense of the Middle East and "our" oil next year alone, but so much less for this battle in humanities war for scientific advancement.

In closing, I could talk about the Russians' efforts to develop a continual human presence in space (the first real "space station") or how America is losing its technological pride, but I will not. Other much more skilled individuals are using those techniques to sell our space program. I prefer an appeal to intelligence and the American sense of adventure, but I could be wrong.

"Joe, that was cruel," Laura said.

"I know I shouldn't have done that to Bill," Joe said.

"I meant to her."

Meanwhile, Muffy had grabbed Bill.

"Hi, I'm Muffy, let's dance!" she said, dragging him out onto the floor.

Bill was at first too surprised to react. And then not strong enough to get away as Muffy dragged him about the dance floor grilling him on his vital information.

Joe noticed Bill was dancing almost every dance with Muffy. Muffy has a tremendous grip, he thought.

Meanwhile, Muffy had gotten pretty far along with Bill.

"I like you," she said, giving Bill a bear hug that made his temples throb. "Joe said you liked me."

Bill looked over and saw him laughing at the bar and thought Revenge.

Wesley

Never a dull moment

By TWEETY BIRD

October 31st marked the birthday of a very special person to many people at UMR. The birthday celebrated belonged to W. Sod., who is known and loved by the members of the Wesley Foundation. W. Sod.'s birthday is celebrated twice a year, once on October 31st, and again on April 1st.

"W. Sod. is the Spirit of the Wesley Foundation," according to Rev. David G. Bennett (affectionately known as Dave to the students), Director of the Wesley Foundation. "He (W. Sod.) never repeats an activity, is very imaginative, and is generally not destructive."

Other activities of W. Sod., whose full name is Wesley Sodnammoc, have included: building a 10-foot birthday cake on Dave's driveway, and turning Dave's office into a parking lot, including three inches of gravel and a woodpile. "These things usually happen by surprise, and are always returned to exactly the way it was."

Of course, there are many other things happening at Wesley. They have meetings every Wednesday night at 6:00. These meetings usually consist of a guest speaker, or a film. At the next meeting, November 11, the film "The Life of Dietrich Bonhoeffer" will be shown. Dietrich Bonhoeffer was a noted theologian of the 20th century who was persecuted and executed in the Nazi holocaust for his faith.

"Thinking and Acting Biblically" is the theme for this year at the Sunday morning chapel service at Wesley. Chapel begins at 9:30 and is started off with the singing of several contemporary songs. Each week, one verse of the Bible is selected and is discussed among those present.

Many of the members of Wesley can be seen around the house at almost any time of the day and night. To many students, it becomes a home away from home, often to the extent that when they go home for the summer, they often get homesick for Wesley. The house is at 403 W. 8th, and the doors are always open to anyone who would like to come by and look around.

Additionally, many of the Wesley students participate in work projects throughout the year. During October 16-17, twenty-four students refurbished the home of an elderly woman in West Plains, Missouri. Usually, one big project is done each semester, in addition to several small projects. Upcoming activities include a woodcut, and the collection of goods for the Bishop's convocation.

Last weekend, many of the Wesley students were sold as slaves in order to raise money. "The response was good, and we raised more money than we had originally anticipated, although the total amount of the donations has not yet been tabulated," stated Rev. Bennett.

Wesley is not just for Methodist students, members consist of at least eight other denominations. Rev. Bennett has been the Campus Minister for two years. He was born in Kansas City, and his interests include playing the guitar, snow skiing, and camping. He is married and has one daughter.

will begin to try to trick you into thinking it has a religious background by walking on water ... this is only a trick! Cats have been known to fall into pools and come out of them dry as a bone.

Secondly, after your friend has closed the gash your cat made from your eye to your upper lip, you can put on your falcon handler's glove, pick up your drill with rotary stripper attachment and strip, er ... wash your cat. This should be done quickly and in the dark, with your friend ready to notify your next-of-kin.

One kitty has been washed, you can pad his paws dry and let him go, he'll get himself dry.

Cats really are not hard to live with. Once you get adjusted to its obnoxious behavior and individualism, they actually are quite fun.

Just think of the infinite joy of being woke up in the deep of the night to the high, shrill hiss of your cat under the bed ...

... Or, picture the queasy feeling you'll get in your stomach from the cat telling you how much it loves you, by shedding in your mouth while you rest.

Yes! What more wonderful thing than to have a cat of your very own? They cost much less than children, and even if they are difficult to discipline, just think of how happy you'll be ...

... When your cat decides it's time to take a long vacation.

But don't get the author wrong ... he loves little cats. In fact, the whole idea for this article stemmed from how a cute little cat saved him from part of his statics homework.

It would seem that someone near his little apartment just outside of Rolla has a little kitty. Well, one day this particular cat began an unrelenting string of "meow's", to quote the cat, just outside his front door. Since the author was in the middle of his statics, he was more than happy to let the cat inside.

A short hair calico jumped into his living room with little hesitation, and proceeded to "check out the joint." Finding all things in order, he decided it would be okay to take a little nap while he was inside. So the cat looked a bit, and found a comfy little spot to curl up and crash ...

... On top of the statics book.

Yes, for those who desire to have a pest, ... er, pet, a cat is by far the best choice. Cats are ingenious, elective, decisive, and ignorant. Obnoxious, belligerent, and impossible. Not to mention selfish.

But they certainly make fine pets.

Defense From page 5

It is true that innocent victims are frequently killed by terrorist types. Mr. Reader's idea that a defensive homicide is justifiable in such cases is very logical, and all of us can undoubtedly identify with his feelings. The only alternative is to have enough faith in God that we feel He will take care of us in these agonizing situations. To the unbeliever, this sounds laughably absurd, but can the believers in the reading audience deny that this is the way the Bible instructs us to handle such a situation?

The logical approach of Mr. Reader seems to be based on the assumption that faith by itself yields insufficient rewards. This is the assumption of an unbeliever, and Mr. Reader's blasphemous misinterpretation of God's Commandment should be identified as such.

"Believers" and unbelievers will continue to favor a strong defense, but we have no right to make the claim that God favors such actions, even among "the good guys." (Q: What do all nations have in common? A: They all identify themselves as "the good guys"). If God tells you personally (in no uncertain terms) that He wants you to strengthen your military defense, then that is an entirely different matter.

Cross country season comes to an end

By DAN BROWN

The UMR cross-country team ended its 1981 cross country season, Saturday, October 31 at Northwest Missouri State University in the Missouri Intercollegiate Athletic Association Conference meet. UMR finished fifth in the meet.

Mike Vanatta, a sophomore at Southeast Missouri State University, won the 10,000-meter race and a new course record of 30:29. Mike was 29th at the 1980 National meet. Central Missouri State University won the meet easily. While SEMO barely edged Northwest Missouri State for second place. Both CMSU and SEMO qualified for the National meet, which will be at Lowell University in Lowell, Massachusetts on November 14. Also qualifying for the National meet were individuals Scott Mantooth of Southwest Missouri State and Todd Arnold (4th) of Northeast Missouri State.

Even though none of the Miners qualified for the National meet, all of the team members ran exceptionally well. Mark Stucky finished his final cross country season for UMR in fine style; he finished thirteenth with a new UMR record of 31:55. Freshman Jeff Peterson finished his first UMR C-C season on a promising note; finished 26th in a time of 32:32. Kevin Stock provided a pleasant surprise with his strong finish. He was the third Miner runner (13th overall) with a time of 32:53. Jim Bullard shaved two minutes off his conference time of 1980 to finish 32nd with a 33:04. Following Jim in 33rd place was Dave Moore. Dave set a personal record for 10,000 meters with his time of 33:08. Clint Campbell, who had missed the Miners' previous two meets because of illness, came on to finish 36th in a time of 33:24. UMR's last runner, Pete Lichtenwalner (40th) finished in 34:27 ... 30 seconds faster than UMR's first finish in the 1980 MIAA meet! The fact that all seven of the Miners posted better times than UMR's first runner in the 1980 meet shows that the 1981 team is a much improved team.

MISSOURI MINER

Miner defense leads to victory

By LARRY TIPTON

The Miners' offensive punch came late in the fourth quarter Saturday, but combined with their stubborn defense, it was enough to push them past the University of Evansville's Purple Aces, 13-3.

The win pushes the Miners' record to 5-2-1 overall and 2-0-1 in conference play. This puts them in very good position for their last two all-important games against Southeast and Northeast Missouri State. If the Miners win both, the conference title will stay in Rolla.

The Miner defense stood out Saturday, holding the Purple Aces to just 4 yards rushing. This was the third consecutive game in which the gridmen have not allowed a touchdown against them — something no Miner team had accomplished in 40 years.

Leading the Miners defensively was junior tackle Bob Pressly, who registered four quarterback sacks, 12 tackles and threw four runners for losses totalling 24 yards. Defensive backs Scott Teter and Steve Davis each intercepted a pass.

The Miners' first score came with 4:10 left in the game when quarterback Dennis Pirkle hit Oscar Berryman with a 63-yard touchdown pass.

The Miners got some insurance with 37 seconds left when Brian Paris carried the ball in from one yard out to make the score 13-3.

Travelling to Cape Girardeau this Saturday, the UMR squad will face the Southeast Missouri State Indians.

Pat Becker

Kickers split on road trip

By LISA GALLAGHER

The UMR soccer team split a pair of games this past weekend. The Miners started out the two-game series with a 4-1 overtime win at Illinois State last Saturday. The victory in itself was exciting, but the game had special meaning for senior forward Pat Becker. Becker added three more goals to his credit to become the new Miner single season scoring leader. Becker's 16 goal record broke the old mark of 14 set last season by teammate Don Anselm.

Although UMR led 1-0 at the half, Illinois State came back to tie the game. Becker scored two goals in overtime while Steve Schillito added one to bring the Miners to a 4-1 win over the Division I opponents.

The second half of the weekend proved less eventful. On Sunday, the team fell to Sangamon State 2-0, despite excellent play by Flynt Usina and Chris Philipp.

"Both players were outstanding," said Coach Paul McNally. "I was really pleased with their efforts." The Miners, now 10-7-1, will finish out the regular season on November 7 when they host Northeast Missouri State. The game is scheduled for 7:00 p.m. at the new soccer complex. Everyone is encouraged to come on out for the final game of the season.

M-Club

Athlete of the week

Pat Becker, once again, deserves this week's nomination as M-Club's Athlete of the Week. Pat put in an outstanding performance against Illinois State University. Not only did he tie the school record held by Don Anselm for the most goals in a season at one point in the game, but he broke that record of 14 goals to set a new record by scoring two additional goals for a 4 to 1 overtime VICTORY for the Miner soccer team. Fantastic! Congratulations, Pat.
