Four University of Missouri-Rolla faculty members have received Student Adviser Awards at the Oct. 7 MSM-UMR Alumni Association Awards Banquet. This is the fifth year the awards have been presented.

Those receiving awards are: Dr. Ronald H. Howell, professor of basic engineering/engineering; Dr. Fred Kisslinger, professor of metallurgical engineering; and Dr. Lance Williams, associate professor of history.

According to Ronald Tappmeyer, Class of '47, retired president and chief executive officer of Reading & Bates Drilling Co., Houston, Texas, and chairman of the MSM-UMR Alumni Association Awards Committee, the awards recognize efforts made by the advisers in assisting students with academic and career decisions.

"Many UMR alumni remember that, as students, they received valuable assistance from faculty advisers," says Tappmeyer. "This award is the Alumni Associations method of honoring current student advisers."

Hansen received his B.S. and M.S. degrees in civil engineering from MSM (now UMR) in 1953 and 1957, and his Sc.D. degree in applied mechanics from Washington University in 1963. He joined the MSM faculty in 1953 as an instructor and attained the rank of full professor in 1965. He became chairman of the engineering mechanics department in 1971 and served in that position for 17 years.

For the past 17 years Hansen has been adviser to all students (freshmen, sophomores and transfers) who were undecided as to which field of engineering they wanted to enter. He has also been an adviser to Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity for 36 years.

Howell received his B.S. degree in 1958, M.S. degree in 1959 and Ph.D. in 1967 in mechanical engineering from the University of Illinois. He joined the faculty at UMR in 1966. For the past 23 years he has advised between 25 and 60 undergraduate students in the mechanical and aerospace engineering disciplines. He also serves as an adviser to several masters and doctoral candidates each year.

In addition to academic advising, Howell also serves as the faculty adviser to student chapters of professional organizations. He was adviser for the student chapter of the American Society of Mechanical Engineering for three years and has spent eight years as adviser to the student chapter of the American Society of Heating, Refrigeration and Air Conditioning Engineers (ASHRAE) which averages 30 student members.

Kisslinger received his B.S. degree in chemical engineering from MSM (now UMR) in 1942 and M.S. and Ph.D. degrees in metallurgical engineering from the University of Cincinnati in 1945 and 1947, respectively. After teaching at the Illinois Institute of Technology in Chicago for 17 years, he joined the UMR faculty in 1964.

During the years prior to the establishment of the freshman engineering program in 1986, Kisslinger was designated as adviser to freshmen by the

News and Publications

Dr. Ted G. Eschenbach, Robert B. Koplar professor engineering management at the University of Missouri-Rolla, is the recipient of the Bernard R. Sarchet Award by the American Society for Engineering Management (ASEM) for outstanding service to the society.

According to ASEM, Eschenbach received the award "in recognition of his achievements as editor of the 'Engineering Management Journal,' which has been adopted as the publication of several management sections of other professional societies."

Eschenbach joined the UMR faculty in 1988. He received a B.S. degree in mathematics from Purdue University in 1971. He received a M.S. degree in operations research from Stanford University in 1973 and a Ph.D. degree in industrial engineering from Stanford in 1975.

Before coming to UMR, Eschenbach served as a professor of engineering management at the University of Alaska-Anchorage. During sabbaticals he served as an adjunct teaching professor of administrative sciences at the Naval Postgraduate school, Monterey, Calif., and as a faculty fellow with the U.S. General Accounting Office in Washington, D.C.

Eschenbach received a National Merit Scholar Award (1969-1971) and a DOW Outstanding Young Faculty Award from the American Society for Engineering Education (1983).

He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa honorary and is the author of numerous articles and scholarly publications. Eschenbach's area of research interest includes economic decision analysis and operations research with applications in engineering economy.

UMR faculty named Fellows of ASEM

Submitted by
News and Publication

Bernard R. Sarchet, professor emeritus of engineering management at the University of Missouri-Rolla, has been elected a Fellow of the American Society of Engineering Management (ASEM) by the organization's board of directors. Also named Fellow of ASEM is former UMR Chancellor Merl Baker.

Sarchet and Baker were honored "for continued distinguished service and contributions to the society." The received the award during the Second International Conference on Engineering Management held in Toronto, Canada, in September.

According to ASEM, the election of Sarchet and Baker to his honor "is especially significant to UM-Rolla as they were instrumental in establishing the pioneer engineering management department at a major university, as well as being founders of ASEM, which also had its inception at UMR.

"UM-Rolla's educational model has since been used by many other colleges and universities in establishing engineering management curricula, especially to support the continuing educational needs of practicing engineers."

Sarchet joined the UMR faculty in 1967 as professor and department chairman and retired as chairman in 1981 to return to full-time teaching and research. During his tenure as chairman, more than 1,700 B.S. and M.S. degrees in engineering management were granted. He was named UMR's first Robert B. Koplar Professor in Engineering Management in 1982.

In recent years, Sarchet's efforts have been instrumental in the development of video education at UMR. He has served as director of UMR's Video Communications Center and serves as chairman of the Engineering Management Curriculum Committee of the National Technological University.

Sarchet, who is a founding member and first national president of ASEM, currently serves as director-at-large of the organization. He is an honorary member of the UMR Academy for Engineering Managers and was the first national chairman of the Engineering Management Division of the American Society for Engineering Education.

He holds B.S. and M.S. degrees in chemical engineering from The Ohio State University and the University of Delaware. He was with Koppers Company Inc. for 26 years in numerous management positions before coming to UMR.

Sarchet is a member of several honorary fraternities and is the author or co-author of several books in the management field.

Letters to the Editor

Role of Stuco activity fee board discussed

Dear Editor:

It often concerns us how many students do not understand how the $120 they pay per semester in student activity fees is distributed and which organizations receive this money. We have submitted this letter in the interest of helping students understand where their money goes.

While StuCo is ultimately responsible for making student activity fee recommendations to the Chancellor, the group responsible for examining recipient organizations and determining student activity fee recommendations to StuCo is the Student Activity Fee Board.

If you have not heard of the Student Activity Fee Board, it is probably because they were formed just last year. Last year's Student Council President, Kevin Edwards, and several other concerned students worked together in order to revise the student activity fee process and overcome several apparent shortcomings. In Kevin Edwards' letter to the newly formed Student Activity Fee Board, he revealed some of these shortcomings and explained some of their objectives:

(from March 21, 1989 letter, 1st page)
I stated throughout my term and still believe, that generating student activity fee recommendations is the most important task that the Student Council performs each year. The recommendations are not important just because of the large amount of money involved; their quality is critical to establishing Student Council's credibility with the student body and the administration. It is a test of the Council's ability to accurately represent the students, make intelligent judgements about complex programs, enforce its spending restrictions, and produce recommendations that are worthy of the approval of the Board of Curators. To be successful, the Council must balance the current wants of the students with the long term good of the campus.

In the past, the Council has done a very poor job of understanding the organizations that receive activity fee money. Since it has not understood the organizations, it has not come close to comprehending their budgets.

The role of the Student Activity Fee Board is to study these organizations, and their budgets, to survey the student body, and to see that organizations are able to maintain and present budgets properly. From an educated and objective point of view, the Board should identify the true issues that require attention of the Council. The final report of the Board should present the alternatives to the Council, including the organizations' requests, the Board's recommendations, and a summary of other alternatives that the Council may need to consider.

The Student Council is eager to see how effective the Student Activity Fee Board will be and expect it will improve the process immensely. It is important, though, that the student activity fee recommendations process be left to the Board and to Student Council since the fee is a supplemental fee paid by the students for student activities and because the new Board needs time to develop and demonstrate that it can work.

An Open Forum will be held November 7 at 6:30 in Centennial Hall, at which time the SAF Board will present their first set of recommendations to StuCo and on November 28 StuCo will actually vote on these. If you care how your yearly fee of $240 is spent, talk to your StuCo Representative and/or be present at the Open Forum on November 7.

Respectfully submitted,

Bob Phillips, President
Student Council

Student Council passes resolution concerning athletic proposal

Dear Editor:

In an effort to provide effective input on the Athletic Department's proposal to improve the overall Intercollegiate Athletic Program by dropping men and women's soccer, men's tennis, and rifle, the UMR Student Council passed a resolution on September 26 stating that the dropping of these athletic programs would not be beneficial and that the Athletic Department should seek an increase in funding as an alternative. As a follow up to this resolution, the athletic director was asked to develop a fee increase amount that would meet the goals of the original proposal, namely, to improve the overall quality of the varsity athletic program and to fund a full-time intramural director. Student Council also requested that the increase should be substantial enough to retain the four sports. This figure was developed and would have amounted to about $8.16 per student per semester. This alternative was not supported by the administration, however, because a third issue, other than 1) varsity athletics and 2) a full-time intramural director has come into play.

For many years now, there has been a recognized need for a new intramural facility. A Physical Recreation Facility Committee, which includes university administrators, faculty, staff and students, is currently investigating this issue, but no firm plans or dollar figures have been set. Neither the original proposal nor the alternative proposal addressed this issue of intramural facilities for this very reason, but it may be included in a new alternative proposal. Because of this new directional change, a separate referendum dealing strictly with the athletic fee will be distributed either by October 24 or November 7, depending on the development of the new alternatives. All students are encouraged to vote on this issue which has been called a "manufactured issue" by one senior administrator.

Should students be required to attend engineering education lectures?

Dear Editor:

I would like to express my opinion on the lecture that was given by Sanford N. McDonnell on October 3. Upon entrance into the University Center, I was greeted by a half dozen friends on their way out. I got upstairs and the Room was packed with a majority of freshmen. I am a senior that had to sit on the floor in the back of the room. I attended the lecture out of my own free will, and was interested in what Mr. McDonnell had to say. Much to my dismay I could hardly hear due to the uninterested freshmen conversations. I was then informed that the freshmen were required to attend this lecture for 15 extra credit points. I think it is appalling that the Freshmen Engineering Department could do this. It was not only disruptive but also turned other interested students away. I hope that future events such as this are not made mandatory, as this will allow those who are truly interested to attend.

Sincerely,
John T. Bullock

Seniors finally see the end of the tunnel

Submitted by
O.K. Coop

The senior year! The end was near! Joe practically floated into ME 104 for the Placement Office's Resume Seminar. Resume, interviews, plant trips, and then all he had to do was decide between all of the job offers.

Joe listened attentively as the Great Gurus of Placement explained the procedure. First, make your resume — and it has to be perfect. Then go have lots of copies made, and be sure to use good paper. Take the copies to the Placement Office and drop them in the folders for all of the companies you are interested in. Then check the prescreen lists frequently and sign up for any interviews for which you are chosen. Research the companies you will be interviewing with. Finally, when you do go to the interviews, whatever you do, don't be late!

"This is cake!" thought Joe. "In only a few months I'll have a fantastic job with great pay, all for very little effort!"

So Joe set about making his resume. He wrote and he typed and he created the world's largest pile of scratch paper. When he finished he knew only one thing stood between him and the perfect resume — the fact that his spelling skills were worse than those of a Lithuanian goat herder.

"Hey Linda, how's it going?"

"Fine, Joe. What are you doing here in H-SS?"

"I just finished my resume and I'm taking it to Professor Xaqueoiljym in the English department so he can check it over for me."

"Oh, I know him. Before he came to the U.S. he helped his family herd goats back in Lithuania. I didn't know he specialized in resumes, though."

"He doesn't, but he does have a Ph.D. in spelling. I gotta go. See you later."

Several gallons of red ink later, Joe listed his GPA to one decimal place. Joe figured that was fine for Tom who had a 4.0, but if Joe did that companies might think he had barely scraped by rather than coming through with the 2.013142 which he had actually achieved.

Off to the printer! Only the best their best paper?"

"Yeah, isn't the stuff great? I'll bet a sheet of it could even support a Calculus text, it's so strong."

"Where did you have these printed?"

"Honest Bob's Previously Owned Copier Shop and Deli, why?"

And it looked beautiful. And, somehow, it was oddly familiar...

"Well, Joe, what do you think?" "This stuff is rich! It seems so familiar, but I can't remember seeing it before."

"You've seen lots of it. It's the same stuff they print dollar bills on. All the rest of us had our resume's done at Francois' Copies and Lamborghini shop. This is the high grade paper they use."

"Oh, no!" thought Joe, "My resume is terrible! They'll never even look unless it happens to fall on the floor in the men's room! I'm through! There's no hope!" Then, a glimmer. "Wait! I may not have quality, but I can have quantity! I'll simply give everyone a resume — someone is bound to interview me!" This resolved, Joe madly stuffed folders and then went home feeling much relieved now that he had a plan of action.

On the way home, he ran into Linda again, and this time she was accompanied by a girl he didn't know.

"Hi, Joe. I want you to meet my friend Sarah."

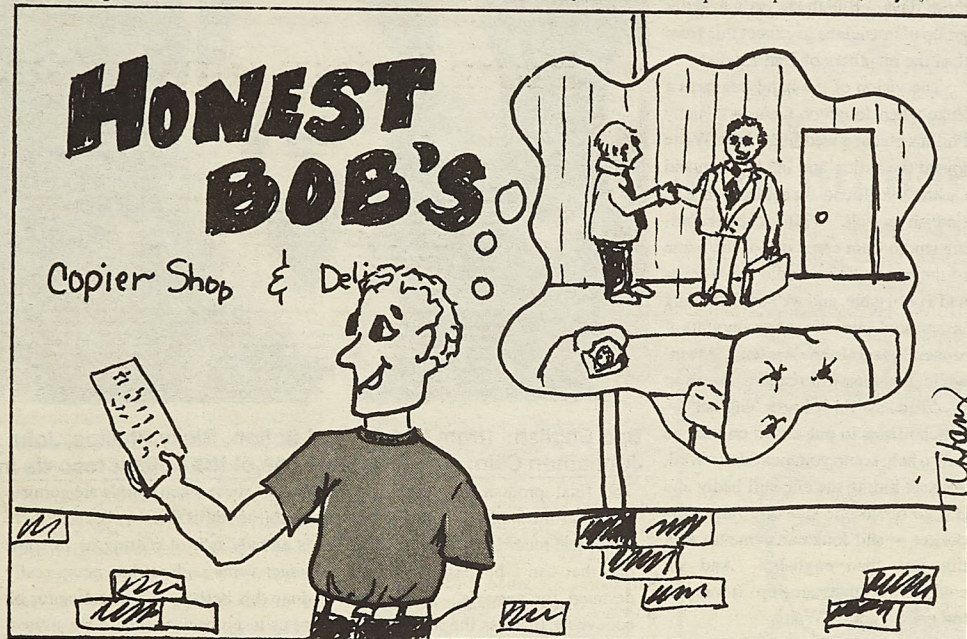

"Hi, Linda. Hi Sarah, nice to meet you. Here, have a couple of these."

"Uh, your resume? I'm no recruiter," Sarah said as she looked at Joe as though trying to find some proof of sanity.

"No, but you might know someone who is. Feel free to make as many copies as necessary."

Sarah, Joe is a graduating senior see Interview, page 12

had a corrected copy of his resume in his hand. A ream of paper after that and he stood admiring his perfect work of art which was all ready for the printer! Even his roommate Tom couldn't have a better looking resume than this! He did, however, notice one difference between his resume and the rough copy of Tom's which he had dug out of the garbage. Tom had only paper would do! The next day Joe picked up his finished resumes and went to the Revered Office of Placement. Of course, Tom was already there.

"Hey, resumes! How'd they turn out Joe?"

"Pretty good I think, thanks to the help of Dr. Xaqueoiljym."

"Wait a minute, did you ask for

"Oh, no Joe! That's terrible! This paper is great next to ordinary stuff, but next to the paper all of the rest of us used, well...let's just say it should come rolled on little cardboard tubes."

"What? Where'd the rest of you go? Let me see one of yours!"

Joe felt the paper that Tom's resume was printed on. It screamed quality. It practically felt like cloth!

Theta Tau hosts 'pizza night'

By Matt Licklider
Staff Writer

Theta Tau Omega is a professional engineering society. Twice a year, this society sponsors a "Pizza Night" in order to raise money for a local Rolla charity. After the money is raised, a vote is taken to determine which charity will receive the money. Last semester, the Rolla Cerebral Palsy School was chosen as the benefactor. Just last week, on October 11, a check for $500 was presented to Bonnie Lewis, the school director.

The concept of "Pizza Night" is a relatively simple, but very effective one. The event takes place over a two week period. Alex's Pizza Palace makes the pizzas and members of Theta Tau make deliveries to various campus organizations and to private

Bad English rewrite music for the 1990's

By Babu Barat
Staff Writer

What do you get when you combine the incomparable talents of one of rock music's most successful vocalists, John Waite; guitar hero Neal Schon; keyboard extraordinaire Jonathon Cain; bass wiz Ricky Phillips; and one of today's premier drummers Deen Castronovo? No, not a super-group, but a superb group. Take a look at the credentials. Waite was lead singer for one of the seventies biggest acts, the Babys, and then put out several successful solo efforts. Schon, who played guitar with Carlos Santana and, of course, Journey. Jonathon Cain of Babys fame as well as being keyboard player for Journey during their prime. Phillips, also a Babys alumnus, and very successful studio musician. And Castronovo, who played on Schon's latest solo record, as well as working with the likes of Tony MacAlpine.

Together they are Bad English, and if that isn't enough to convince you of what they have to offer, then check out their self-titled debut on Epic Records. Produced by the Richie Zito this album screams with talent and integrity. These five guys have come up with some mouth-watering music that will leave your mouth hanging open and your ears craving more. The album has already rendered the highly successful single "Forget Me Not," and the current video and single for the ballad "When I See You Smile" is currently working its way to the top of the charts. Waite's voice shines as it has never before on tracks like "Ghost In Your Heart" and "Rockin' Horse."

You can feel his emotion as he puts his heart and soul into every track on this record. Schon gets a chance to rip on the guitar. Something he hasn't been able to do since his stint with HSAS. This is some of his finest guitar work to date. Cain plays some power-keyboards on this record unlike those of Journey-past. Collaborating with Waite and the rest of the band they have come up with some songs that are sure to be classics. And as we all know, classics are hard to come by these days. But there isn't a better group of musicians to expect this from than the members of Bad English.

The vision of the band began as a fluke when Jonathon Cain and Ricky Phillips met at a wedding. John Waite joined the action and later Schon and Castronovo found their home in Bad English as well. While at the recording studio Cain came up for the name of the band. "The studio we were at had a pool table, and we started having insane pool games for huge amounts of money," said John Waite. "Meanwhile, Jonathon was reading a book on pool and saw this phrase 'english' — which means to put a spin on the cue ball to help set up your next shot. Well, we kept hitting the cue ball badly and it'd go off to one side and fall in the pocket — and Jonathan came up with this line 'bad english.' And we couldn't pass that name up. It was just too good," added Waite.

From there success was inevitable. Recording thirteen songs from over thirty-five they had written together, the members of Bad English completed the album within a few weeks.

Bad English: (from l. to r.) Neal Schon, Ricky Phillips, John Waite, Deen Castronovo, and Jonathon Cain; currently have one of the hottest records in the country and the world.

The final product can currently be heard on the nation's airwaves or at your local record store. This album is one that can't be passed up. It is destined for success. If you don't believe me than ask the sold out crowd that the band will be playing to on Monday night at Mississippi Nights. The concert sold out within a few days. So for all of you who didn't get a ticket, check out the album. You won't regret it!

Ricky Phillips recently familiarized me with what Bad English has in store everyone. He gave me a little history as well as what plans there are for the future. This is what he had to say.

Many people may not be familiar with you since you've been out of the spotlight after the Babys broke up. What have you been up to over the past few years?

I've been pretty active in the L.A. studio scene. I've done a little road stuff. A lot of television stuff. Writing for television and some film. It's a pretty big music scene out here in L.A. I've kept myself busy with that. It's kind of hard to explain because it is the kind of work that isn't high profile.

How's the tour been going?

It's been great! We started off in Japan with Jeff Beck. We got back, did the west coast, and are currently touring the rest of the country.

I noticed the band is basically playing smaller venues around the country. Is there a reason for that as opposed to playing the large arenas? At this point we want to get out and play. We really want to be accessible to the audiences. This is going to be the only time when people are going to be able to see us this way because there is already talk of putting us in some larger venues. Neal has never really done this before. It's a chance for all of us to go back to where we started. Even though it is loud and we are really set up more for an arena, it's been a lot of fun for us as well as the audiences. You can see the whites of their eyes rather than the impersonal setting of an arena. As a player I am more nervous in a smaller place than a larger venue. When you play for 70,000 people you can't really tell if you are reaching people, whereas in a club you can feel the vibe.

Yeah. From a fans point of view a small theater or club is the ultimate place to see a band.

The bad part is that there have been literally hundreds of people outside the shows not able to get in. We were doing two shows a night at the beginning so we could get people in to see the band, but it was wearing us out. We did three shows in one day at one point. We did a free show in downtown Hollywood. And that night we played two shows at the Whiskey.

How did the formation of this band occur?

The way it really happened was that Jonathon (Cain) and I bumped into each other at his brothers wedding in Saratoga, California. The next day, nursing hangovers, we ended up at the top of this mountain in a winery. He said to me "You know this Journey thing is pretty much worn out. It's over. I want to do a really good-time rock 'n' roll band like we had with the Babys, are you in?" I said sure. He said he had to do a few things to do with Michael Bolton on the road, and in the meantime he wanted me to check out guitar players and singers. While he was on the road, Trudy Green got he and Waite together because they were both in New York. I think at the time Michael Bolton was opening up for Heart. Jonathon told John (Waite) what he had in mind and John said lets check it out. So they called me and we decided that it was worth a shot. Lets see what will happen if we get back together. We wanted to see if there was still a place where we related musically. So we did.

At that point was there any hint of a Babys reunion?

That's what we were kind of afraid of. As a matter of fact when me and John talked to each other; him in New York and me in California, we said hey it will be fun but if we don't have any new information then lets not do it. The last thing we wanted was a Babys reunion. We wanted to do something new and different. We all had gone off in different directions musically, but when we got together at John's place it was great. We spent almost two months in his home studio writing songs. Through all that Neal started coming around. He was helping us out recording because at that point Jonathon and I were playing the guitar. Danny Carmassi, Heart's drummer, was also coming by and helping us out in the studio. Neal started getting to

Fan speaks about Debbie Gibson

I just wanted to write to tell you thanks for the great article about Debbie Gibson in last weeks issue of the Miner. I had a chance to see her in concert in St. Louis and she was a really excellent performer.

It was great to read an article about her that presents her in a positive light. She has been my favorite musician for a year and a half now, and I get sick of critics who just want to knock her, articles that give no information that anyone cares about, and people making such a big deal about her age.

I really enjoyed the show. To top it off, I met her dancer Buddy Casimano, and drummer Fred Levine, after the show. They were really nice people.

One of the things that I admire her for is the fact that she seems to have kept her feet on the ground. I also agree very strongly with the meaning behind the song "We Could Be Together." Her music is of a different variety to me since most of the music

I listen to is stuff like Guns and Roses, Led Zeppelin, Def Leppard, Billy Joel, and AC/DC. I really think she is great! Respectfully- Lindell Jones

I receive a lot of comments about many of the artists I write about in my column, but yours was worth printing. I believe Debbie has a lot ahead of her. I also saw her show and she was fabulous. People don't realize how much talent she possesses. She is a gift to the music industry and I'm sure you and me both will be hearing a lot from her in the years to come. By the way, I'll make sure someone associated with Debbie receives your comments. — Babu

SUB provides a wide variety of events

Submitted by Student Union Board

Now we all know that the Student Union Board presents movies every week and also great concerts once or twice a year but we are much more than that. We try to present a wide variety of events to fit the many varied tastes of our fellow students. Unfortunately due to ultra-conservative administration officials that have life size posters of good ole' Jime & Tammy on the inside of their office doors, the Nude Jello wrestling competition has been postponed until a more liberal administration is in place. There are many of you out there who have clamored for this event to be held on the UMR campus and to you wonderful, although perverted, people we apologize. Other events suggested involving hot oil, peanut butter, and Jim Nabors, have been set aside for further study. Remember folks, your voice counts, so keep those letters coming.

On the more traditional, yet no less fun than Jello wrestling, side to the Student Union Board there are several diversified events planned. For those of you in excellent physical condition, competitors by strength, go sit down. For those couch lizards out there, like my self, we have got a great competition for you. It's hot, it's now.....it's FOOSBALL. The Student Union Board is proud to present the Fall 89 UMR Foosball tournament to be held from Oct. 23 to Oct. 27 in the University Center East Game Room. CASH prize of $35.00 to the first place winner, and a CASH prize of $15.00 to the runner up. Sign up today in the Student Union Board office located upstairs in the U.C. West.

For those of you folks who enjoy good music we've got both ends of the spectrum covered. On Saturday Oct. 21 the Student Union Board is proud to present one of the hottest college bands in the nation, CRAZY 8's. The show begins at 8:00 pm in the Miner Recreation facility across from Multi-useless. Admission to this great rock-n-roll event is absolutely free to all UMR students. On the other end of the spectrum, no less important than great rock-n-roll, and no less fun than Jello wrestling, the UMR student union is proud to present the St. Louis Brass Quintet on Oct. 24 at 8:00 pm in Centennial Hall of the U.C. East. These soulful sounds are world famous. This group has actually achieved history in the classical music world by being the opening act for the Rolling Stones in St. Helens, WA. Admission to see this fantastic event is FREE to all UMR students, spouses, children and pets of UMR students.

The Subcinema has got a hot weekend planned for Oct. 20, and 21. The feature films will be Biloxi Blues at 7:00 pm and Ladyhawk at 9pm in ME 104. Biloxi Blues is a great movie from the great master of irony Neil Simon. The main character of this movie is played by Matthew Broderick. The second movie of the evening, Lady Hawk, is a classic which need no explanation.

Although at press time it could not be confirmed, a sketchy report has implicated that Marty Jishke is really Elvise Presely in Costume or he might be possessed by space aliens, yeah the ones that landed in Russia. So if you see Marty eating peanut butter and pickle sandwiches, who knows!!!!!! Well until next time guys and girls, hav fun and enjoy what is impossible to really enjoy with out lying alot, yeah UMR you boobs.

END violation of human rights

Submitted By Amnesty International at UMR

Greetings. As many of you have come to realize, the world is not a perfect place, especially if one leaves the friendly confines of the United States. Hey, we could be in China, being executed as a pro-democracy, anti-party demonstrator. Or we could be a political prisoner of conscience in either a left- or right-wing cell, being tortured simply for disagreeing with the ruling party's views. Or we could just be shot for being a member of a non-ruling party in Latin America. The list of wonderful possibilities goes on.

Of course none of this happens to us...but these things do happen. Should they? If you feel that the above-mentioned activities are wrong and should be stopped, then you hold the same views as Amnesty International (AI). Perhaps you have heard of AI before, but for those of you who haven't, AI is a non-partisan, non-profit organization whose main concern is stopping violations of human rights, both here and abroad. AI actively opposes these violations through mass letter-writing campaigns to the leaders of the offending nations, calling for the end of such human rights violations. With enough letters from Amnesty members, prisoners on conscience have been released, executions have been stopped, and families torn apart by oppressive governments have been reunited.

But still, infractions of basic human rights continue today. And, as of yet, the students of UMR have not been able to voice their opinions to the world. But this can change. There will be an organizational meeting for the UMR chapter of Amnesty International on Sunday, October 22, at 6:00 p.m. at the Puck. Now, you can have an outlet to voice your views on human rights violations in this wonderful world. All who are interested, yes, even non-students are welcome.

If you are unable to attend, but are still interested please call 341-9932 at Kelly Hall and ask for Jim Kaiser in Room 228. You have an opinion, and now you can have a voice to express it. Use it.

World Series gets all "A's" from critics

By Scott Konersmann
Assistant Sports Editor

The first game of the 1989 World Series was not quite the bloody Battle of the Bay that it had been talked up to be. It was more of a skirmish, with the Oakland A's being the victor. San Francisco gave five runs to the A's including two home runs, but were unable to come back and score against them. The point rundown went like this: In the second inning Tony Phillips batted in Dave Henderson. In the same inning Walt Weiss batted in Terry Steinbach and Rickey Henderson batted in Tony Phillips. After two innings the score was the A's three, Giants nothing. Then in the third inning Dave Parker hit one out making the score four to nothing. And Walt Weiss hit one out in the fourth to make it five to nothing. After the fourth inning there were no other runs scored. If the A's keep up this pace they might throw off the nickname 'Chokeland' that they received last year. The reason behind the nickname is that they made it to the 1988 World Series but then were destroyed by the Los Angeles Dodgers in five games. That is the reason most critics were cautious about favoring Oakland to win the series this year. After all they won one hundred and four regular season games last year and were heavily favored to win the series. But then disgraced themselves by losing four to one. One thing the A's had going for them was the eight wins out of nine games in the spring against the Giants. Another thing the A's have is Rickey Henderson. Henderson is known to throw the balance of the defense out of sync. If the Giants don't keep him off the bases the series might not turn out so good for the Giants. Critics and fans alike feel that the A's have a chance to win the series after winning the first game but some say the win was due to the fact that the game was in Oakland. You can't count the Giants out after only one game. There are as many as six games to go and anything can happen in six games. Game number two will be in Oakland and the next three are in San Francisco. The Giants have a good chance to upset the A's in their own park. Even though the Giants are the underdogs in this series the stronger team doesn't always win. Just ask the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Miners break Bear's wishbone; but the wish did not come true

By Eric Hardin
Staff Writer

The Miners' slow offense helped Northwest Missouri State recover their sixth win of the season. Though lacking offense, the tough defense of UMR held the number one rushing offense of Northwest Missouri to one touchdown, for the Miners lost Saturday by a score of 7-3. UMR's defense played its best game of the season Saturday. The Bearcat's wishbone offense usually averages more than 300 yards a game, but the Miners held them under 200. At halftime, the match was still scoreless. Northwest lost two prime opportunities to score when they entered the Miners' half of the field. A fumble halted the first drive, and a combination of a quarterback sack and a penalty was able to send the game into the locker-room. Northwest's only score came with six seconds left in the third quarter. After a Bearcat's time out, Miner punter Alex Nagy was forced to kick into a brisk wind. Northwest gained control of the ball on their own 54 yardline. With some help from the wind, quarterback Jeremy Wilson tossed a 54 yard pass to Phillip Quinn, making the score 7-0. The Bearcat's began the fourth quarter with a fumble. Rolla's noseguard Cameron Hubbs secured the ball at Northwest's 24 yard line. The recovery gave Rolla an excellent opportunity to put themselves on the board. The scoring drive was stopped when Miner fullback Randy Mullinax fumbled the ball two plays later.

Just as everything looked to be in favor of Northwest, Wilson fumbled the ball on the nine yard line, allowing Hubbs again to recover the ball and put UMR in the driver's seat. The next three plays depicted the UMR offense of the afternoon. The Miner offense lost 12 yards and was only able to get three points on a 37 yard field goal by David Belloli. Final standings showed Mullinax ran for 75 yards and the Miners secured 279 offensive yards to the Bearcats' 271. UMR falls to 1-5 in the MIAA and overall, as the Bearcats are 6-1, losing their only game to Missouri's next opponent, undefeated Pittsburg State. The game will be played at new Jackling Field Saturday at 1:30.

"Gee, I never would have guessed."

As the weeks went by Joe handed out many copies of his resume. His professors were grateful as, when folded in quarters, they were perfect for coffee cup coasters. Joe checked the prescreen lists at the Placement Office every day, but as weeks went by, he began to despair of even making an alternate list. Tom, as predicted, had over twenty interviews lined up so far. Joe sighed. He wished he had been cut out to have a 4.0, be president of three honor societies, treasurer of a professional society, a Student Council Representative, Hang Glider of the Year, and entirely self-supporting through college while being a paramedic and concert pianist in his spare time. He didn't know how Tom did it, but he suspected it was somehow connected to the tanker trucks marked "caffiene" which visited their apartment weekly.

Then, like an anvil dropped out of the clear blue sky (except not as painful) he found his name as an alternate on a prescreen list! Heaven! A week passed, and a fantasy came true — a call from the Placement Office asking if he wanted an interview with them.

"Yes!" he practically shouted. "Any time that is available! When should I be there?"

"Any time you want. You're the last alternate on the list and we still have all slots open. When do you want?"

"How about 1:00 p.m.?" he asked. This was the perfect time of day. The interviewer would be fresh from lunch — content, and perhaps a little sluggish.

"That's fine. And remember, interviewers think there is no reason for being late. Be there at least ten minutes early. Goodbye."

Hey, Joe, was that the Placement Office?" asked Tom. "Did you get an interview?"

"Yes, I can't believe it! It's with Acme Manufacturing R.D.D. Division. This is wonderful!"

"R.D. & D.? Research, Development, and Design?"

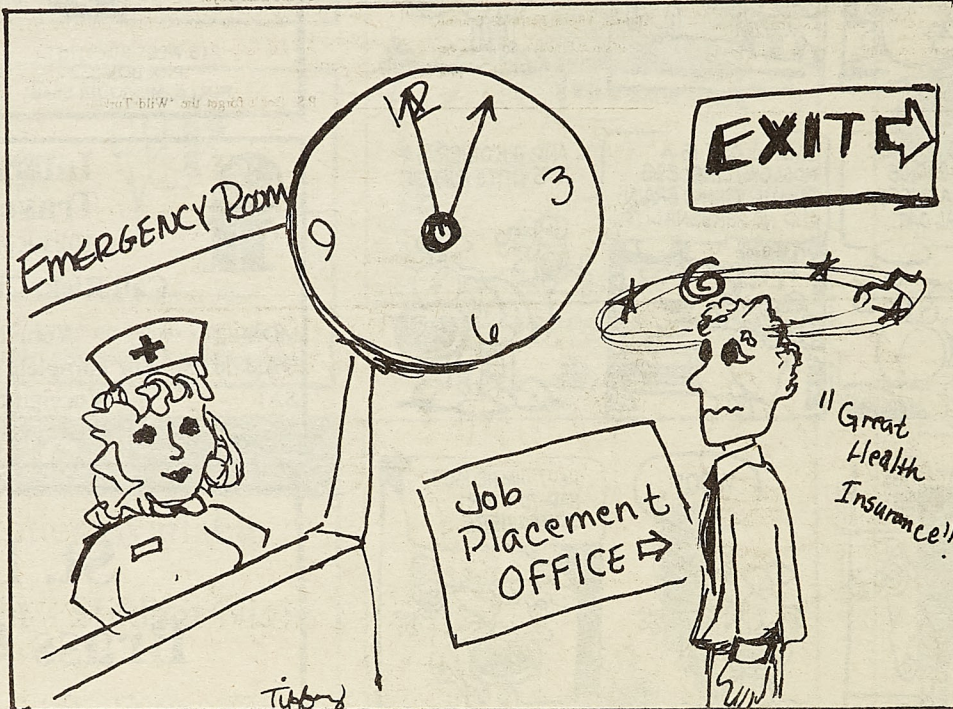

"No, Rubber Doggie Doodle — one of the most popular items this year!"

"You're actually interviewing with them!?! Everyone I know didn't even grace them with a resume."

"Well, I'll take what I can get. I'll go research the company this afternoon; the interview is tomorrow. An interview. This is wonderful!"

Tom sighed and went back to work on his latest article for the Wall Street Journal.

The day passed, and the next morning saw Joe getting ready for his interview so he could be there at 11:00 a.m. After all, if ten minutes early was good, two hours early must even be better, right?

Joe reverently got his interviewsuit out of the closet. It was exactly what "Dress For Success" had ordered: navy blue suit, white shirt, maroon tie, and black wing tip shoes. He had gotten it at one of those department stores in St. Louis. They charged a bit more, but the interview suit had to be first class! Not everyone was as fortunate as Tom was — his suit had been made by his mother who was head of the tailoring division at Niemann Marcus. Joe smiled at his suit admiringly. This should definitely fit into the corporate culture of such a well established firm as Acme Manufacturing. He happily began to change clothes in preparation for the Big Event.

At this moment Tom was in a mad rush. He had just returned from his last trip with the ambulance and was nearly running late for a charity benefit concert he was supposed to be giving. He reached their apartment and threw open the door as he rushed in to change into his tuxedo. He was greeted by the sight of Joe flying through the air with a loud scream. The imprint of a door-knob showed plainly on his backside. "Oh #&%*! My interview pants! The leg is ripped out!"

Tom, however, did not notice the pants. What he did notice was Joe's leg. The upper thigh was quite bloody and it appeared that there were several bone fragments sticking out at impossible angles.

"Great Scott, Joe, who cares about your pants?! Your leg is broken!"

Joe looked at his leg. Sure enough, Tom seemed to be right again. It appeared that he had struck his thigh on an old Physics text which had been laying in that spot on the floor for the past three years. The book had apparently petrified during that time. It then finish dressing. I'll drive you."

"Oh thanks Tom! I'll never forget this!" said Joe gratefully as he tried to put himself together in some semblance of order.

"Oh thanks Tom! I'll never forget this!" said Joe sarcastically as Tom drove past the Placement Office and headed for the hospital.

"One of these days his brain is going to wake up and then we're all it we'll know quite soon what insurance you have."

"Uh, I have an interview in an hour. How long will this take?"

"Oh, the search will only take a few hours. Then we can start treating you. Afraid you'll have to miss the interview, though. Who was it with?"

"Acme Manufacturing R.R.D. Division."

"Oh, yes. You should get a job with them. They have excellent health insurance. You'd be fully covered if you worked for them. Sorry you'll have to miss it," she said as she left the room to go find the computer.

"A few HOURS!?" thought Joe. "I can't wait. I'll just have to walk to the interview as best I can. I hope Tom crashes his hang glider into that big music critic's new car! This place is farther from the Placement Office than our apartment was!"

Joe looked around and, seeing that nobody was watching, he decided now was the time to get up and slip out the front door. "Yeahhh!" His brain must be waking up. Then, all of a sudden, the pain stopped. Must be overloading again. Good. He began to hobble out of the hospital. When he got outside he had the good fortune to find a forked branch suitable for use as a crutch. It must have been blown down in the storm the previous night. He fell in the mud as he reached for it, but then managed to get up and limp slowly towards the interview.

"Joe Senior, Jr." called the interviewer for the fifth time. He was quite disgusted. Only one person on his schedule wasn't so bad, but he had been winning in a poker game he'd had to leave to come interview this jerk who wasn't even here. "Joe Senior, Jr." he said one last exasperated time. "Here, Sir. I'm here!" rasped a voice from the end of the hallway.

The interviewer looked towards the faint cry. His first impression was of Moses after he'd spent 40 years in the desert, but this person was much too wet for that. "You're Joe Senior?" asked the interviewer incredulously. "Yes, Sir," said Joe as he hobbled towards the interviewer in what had to appear a very goal-oriented fashion. "I'm sorry I'm late, Sir. I'm very sorry. Will you still see me, Sir? Please?"

"Great Galloping Doggie Doodle! What happened to you? Have you been to the hospital?"

"Yes, Sir. I just came from there. If I'd stayed I'd have missed the interview completely."

"Son, sit down! Before you fall down," he added mentally. "Why do you want to work for our company so badly?"

"Well, Sir," said Joe, as he fell into the nearest chair, "I heard you had great health insurance."

—Th-Th-Th-That's All, Folks!—

going to be in trouble," thought Tom as he pulled into the Emergency Room. "You're name please?" said the nurse on duty.

"Senior, Joe Sr."

"Not your class, please, your name."

"Senior is my name."

"O.k., Senior Joe, and you're a junior. Thank you Mr. Joe."

"No, no, my name is Joe Senior, Jr."

"Oh, I'm sorry Mr. Junior. And you're a senior?"

"No, my name is Senior. Yes, I'm a senior. And my first name is Joe."

"Oh, I see. Joe Senior. You're a senior."

"Almost. That's Senior, Jr."

"Oh, so you're a junior, Mr. Senior."

"I hate my parents," thought Joe. "Here, have one of these," he said, as he handed her a resume. Amazing. She was the first person who ever looked happy when he did that.

"Oh, I see, Mr. Senior. Sorry about that. Now, what kind of insurance do you have?"

"I'm not sure. Whatever kind my parents have, I suppose. If they have any. I really don't know."

"In that case we'll have to use our computer to do a search. You're lucky we have our new Timex Sinclair. With occurred to Joe that looking at his leg had been a tactical error.

"Y a a a h h h h h ! #&%#@#&%!&!"

"Gee, Joe, that must hurt a lot,"

Tom observed astutely.

"You can tell he's a paramedic," thought Joe. I've gotta get to my interview! I'll be late!" he said.

"I think a severe shattering on the intermedial region of the femur with profuse bleeding would be considered an adequate excuse for missing an interview, Joe. We've got to get you to the hospital!"

"No, I'll go after the interview. It doesn't hurt so bad now. I guess it's a good thing that my pants ripped otherwise my leg wouldn't fit into them now. If you could just drive me to the Placement Office?"

"Joe, the human brain can only tolerate so much pain. Yours shut down due to overload. We have to take you to the hospital."

"Afterwards! Please drive me to the interview?"

"Perhaps it's time of try a different approach," thought Tom. "Joe, do you really want to go to an interview with part of your brain shut down?"

"I have no choice! This is my only chance!" replied Joe.

"They'd probably never know the difference," thought Tom as he prepared to switch to plan C. "O.k., Joe, the point where he was almost done with his solo project and he was coming around an awful lot and hanging out. We started feeling like a band even though nothing was really said. Neal had his commitments and we didn't want to wait for him. But we couldn't find another guitar player who could fill the shoes that he had already stepped into. So in time it all came around. Neal brought in Dean at that point. Dean played the drums on Neal's solo record. He was great, but up until then he was basically playing speed metal exclusively. He played with Tony McAlpine and another band. The first day we played with him we did "You Get The Best Of What I Got," and it just really worked well. That's the Reader's Digest version of how things happened.

I think the best thing that you all did was not do a Babys reunion. Not that I have anything against the Babys, but that was then and this is now. Absolutely! We don't do any Babys songs in the show or any solo stuff, or anything like that. We are a new band. If we ever did do anything like that down the line, because I hate to say never, that would be for whatever reasons happened then. Maybe for fun or goofing around. But right now it is the furthest thing from our mind. And also this supergroup hype thing people keep putting on us is kind of ridiculous because that isn't the point of this band. The point of this band is that we have fun playing together. We've known each other for years and years have wanted to play together on some type of recording project.

It seems to me that you, Jonathon and John did most of the song-writing. How much input did Neal and Deen have, if any?

It's really hard to say because you are going to see Jonathon Cain's and John Waite's names on most of the songs, but there is stuff that Neal or Deen didn't really write, but they put so much of their blood, sweat and tears in the song that the song wouldn't have really turned out that way without them. That is what a band is all about. We were trying to find ourselves and who we were. It was a new thing. We had to write a lot of material to find out what direction we were going in. We experimented a lot with different types of things, but it was obvious in the end which songs worked with the band. There was a song that the two Johns and I wrote which was almost a Peter Gabriel type of thing. It was a very emotional and intense song, but it didn't have anything to do with Bad English.

Did the fact that all of you had extensive studio experience speed up the studio process any?

Seven of the thirteen songs were first takes, and I don't think any song went past three takes. We would go back in and have ideas and change things around, but the main foundation were usually first takes. It made things happen a lot quicker. If something didn't happen right away we would pretty much trash it. That is something you learn after wasting hours and hours in the studio. And the times when something was really close we would let it work itself out. There are certain things that become instinctive. Were you happy with Richie Zito? He did a really good job. He understood what we wanted. He also gave us a lot of room, a lot of free reign. But he tightened the reigns when we needed it. I think he learned a lot from the experience as well because everyone did have so much recording experience under their belts. He is a good leader and he knew what he wanted. We have a lot of cooks in this outfit and without somebody who could take the reigns the way he did, it would have been disastrous. We all have big egos. I'm talking creativity here. It's like children and everyone is fighting for their own opinion. You've got to have someone who can be a good mediator and also keep it musically cohesive, and I think Richie did that.

Has the band planned on making Bad English a long term project?

Well, we really haven't made any long term promises. All of us would love to make five or six records together. But the only promise we have made is that as long as it is as fun as it is now and everybody is happy and musically satisfied, we are going to keep this thing going. Hopefully that will be a long time.

Have you all decided on the follow-up video for "Forget Me Not"?

Yes. It is for "When I See You Smile." How do you feel about the videos? Well, the video for "Forget Me Not" I, personally, didn't like. I don't like quick cut editing. It was the typical MTV video where there's a girl in there for no apparent reason and you can't figure out what the story line is. The original storyline was really good. It was about two souls who meet again in another life and get reacquainted.

There's a lot of symbolism in the two birds flying off at the end symbolizing that their spirit will live on forever. That is "Forget Me Not." It never really was achieved in the video. I thought for as much money as we spent on the video that it should have been much better. But, people seem to like it. We have a lot of personality in this band and I didn't think it was shown. It was a little cold feeling to me. So on this video we are trying to keep really honest. It will have a concept. We are filming ourselves backstage on the road, on stage, the audience and everything we do. We want to make light and fun and not so pretentious.

What is the attitude of the band you embark on this tour?

We are all really excited about this. You ask any guy in the band they will tell you that we are more excited about this than any previous project that any of us have ever done. Neal is happy to be able to play some aggressive guitar again. John Waite loves the support and strength he gets from being in the band. Jonathon is able to do things that he was unable to do before with Steve Perry, but has been wanting to do for quite some time. Deen is just excited to be put in a position where he is able to show off his talents and also be in a band that is as well received as we have been so far.

What about you?

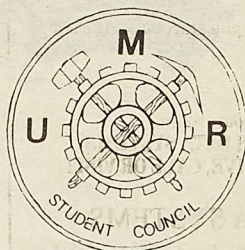

In my case I've wanted to be in a band again; ever since the Babys split up tried before, but for one reason another I couldn't hold it down. So I think this is the best gig of all. I could be with better players or better people.

I would like to thank Laurie Gorman H.K. Management for all of her help organizing this interview.
